| RRE Evo X Takes Fifth Place in the Auto Barrel Race at Hot Import Nights Anaheim |

For those unfamiliar with Auto Barrel Racing (autobarrelracing.com) it is a combination of drag and drift. Two cars race to a barrel 100 yards from the starting line and do a full circle drift around the barrel then sprint to the next barrel and repeat two more times and then race to the finish line. I entered the Auto Barrel Race to see the power of the Evo X. Competing against fully prepared drift cars, I thought for sure there would not be a chance. Sixty (60) cars registered for the event which took place as part of an exhibition at the Hot Import Nights Show. I made the qualifications and was part of the top 16 drivers of the event. From there I raced against a Nissan 240 prepared drift car and beat him by about .800 of a second. It was close and he had me in the drift, but was no match as I pulled on him with the power of the RRE Evo X. I then made it into the top eight. The other drivers were eliminated and three advanced and I was competing for the fourth position. I raced a 350z also prepared for drifting for the top four. He beat me by about .300 of a second as I used a bit too much e-brake and lost my consistent drift which gave him just enough to beat me. The series only cost me a clutch as I found out the hard way that the stock clutch can't handle the power and isn't the best drift car. There were a lot of spectators and I was able to talk to a lot of people that were eyeballing the car and checking out all the sweet parts from the sponsors.
